Contextual

Over the last decades international donor agencies have incredibly given greater prominence to the role of NGOs in social welfare and development of the civil society. This prominence has not only been in the form of greater financial amounts being given in grants to NGOs but also as a proportion of the total aid given to countries. This increase in funding both in real and relative terms has seen a substantial growth of NGOs all over the world and especially in the developing nations and Pakistan. It has a relatively young NGO sector has seen growth in the number of NGOs over the last decade. Today, over three hundred intermediary organizations provide social services through network of grassroots, and many more local community-based organizations (CBOs) are working to address basic social needs at the community level. They address a varying range of issues from education, income generation, micro-finance, irrigation, and health, to democracy and rights. Similarly the last decade and a half has also seen an increase in the number of donors in Pakistan. Over 50 percent of the donors in this directory have begun operating in Pakistan. Most of donors state philanthropic reasons for their support, most of them emphasizing poverty alleviation and sustainable development. Many also identify improvement in the lives of vulnerable groups such as women and children. Many reasons are cited for why donors provide support to NGOs: the donor and NGO relationship is a mutually beneficial one. Governments as well as civil society organizations in the donor countries feel a social responsibility towards the developing countries.

A strong civil society can bring about a stable environment for business. It must be remembered however, that donors, like NGOs are not homogenous in nature and consists of various different types of organizations. While local philanthropy is also a potentially vast source of resources for NGOs it remains largely based on individual initiatives, and is only beginning to get organized in the sense organized philanthropy. Funding amounts vary depending upon the donor policies and the capacity of the NGO to utilize funds. NGOs having a sound track record and an effective organizational structure working proper accounting, monitoring and evaluation systems in place are more likely to receive larger and repeated grants. NGOs that is able to show the effectiveness of their programs also more likely to receive grants. Yet many donors have windows with small grants for organizations just starting out. Similarly different donors have different policies on whether they will support an NGO beyond one project cycle. Currently, the Government arrangements are frequently changing to strengthen the accountability system for International agencies contribution for the charity, which affected the donor interests to turn their prioritization for other countries.

The ongoing process of greater economic interdependence among countries known as economic globalization is reflected in the increasing amount of cross-border trade in services and expertise. As of country Pakistan passing from difficult zone due to weak surveillance system and political well. The election has brought new and educated faces with diverse experiences to scale up our existing system. The new elected Govt personal has shown their commitment for strengthen the systems and build the capacity to address the surveillance system.

The Prime Minister prioritizes in his agenda overseas Pakistani challenges and given them opportunities for the contribution in the country economy to be boosted up. Currently almost 10 million overseas Pakistanis, whom contributed over $18.45 billion to the National economy. Apart from that the Govt of Pakistan considering the existence of overseas contribution in charity and other sectors however overseas have faced hitches in term of land grabbing on properties once they return back to their homes and they always faced general lack of support from the country's diplomatic missions abroad, It is pointed out that overseas Pakistanis faced "corrupt practices at all levels" in the country from exploitation to abuse at the hands of immigration officials. The overseas are willing to establish their business on return to homeland, however in most cases they faced cheating in the business to start-up and partnerships.

In the context of alteration phase this was the right time to introduce the concept of consortium and base to cater the needs of Pakistani community of the marginalized groups by taking the opportunity of philanthropists overseas as an investor for the common interest / benefits.
